

Malabrigo with a Twist

I am not a yarnie - that is, I don't look for all the cool and new yarns, and have to hunt them down on Etsy or other sites. I am pretty happy with what's available at my local LYS - this one and this one too.

So, when the new Malabrigo Twist became available, it was pretty unusual for me to leap on the bandwagon so quickly. But the favorite colorway was available, so I scooped up two skeins - one for a cowl, and the other will be for a hat.

My feelings about this yarn: it has all the wonderful squishiness and softness of the Malabrigo brand. It is advertised as a subtle thick and thin bulky yarn. I beg to differ, based on the skein that I knitting. It seems more like an Aran-weight yarn, and there wasn't much thick-and-thin in my skein.

The cowl pattern (Birthday Cowl - a free pattern) worked quite well with the yarn, although I adjusted the stitch count for my gauge.

I will definitely be knitting with this yarn again. Brandy seems to approve as well!
