

WIP Report

Not much completion going on in Casa del Revknits. But there are things to report.

My spinning mojo is quite good at the moment. I'm spinning with Pigeonroof Falkland, and I love the colors. I hope I'm not overspinning the fiber:

The progress on the vest has reached the steak level - I've created the armhole steaks. I'm about to start creating the steak for the V-neck - it's a little scary, knowing what will be happening. And because of all the colors, this is not a portable project. I would like to get it done before Ravelympics begin, but I have a fair amount of travel, so that might be a little beyond me at the moment.

The comfort knitting is my Lacy Prayer Shawl - in Malabrigo worsted in Natural - I might use this project for a dye experiment. Free download through Ravelry - go to this page on my blog, and you'll see.

And I need to start on a baby sweater project for my boss, that will probably be the travel project...only two colors in a cheap but washable/dryable yarn!
