

Sextuplet of Socks

I think I'm done with knitting socks. There are seven pairs, and while they're knit in a worst-ish weight yarn, it is still 14 socks. But the magical experiment of hand-dyeing the yarn kept me interested enough:

Izzie offered to do her usual inspection.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

I think I passed.

Now I'm onto knitting the Mythos cardigan in the latest Knitty. There's a beautiful oversize one that I'm drooling over on Laura Nelkin's blog and hoping that mine will resemble it somewhat.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

Given that I'm reworking all the math to go with a different gauge using a single strand of gorgeous handpainted laceweight from Pagewood Farm, this will be interesting, to say the least. The calculator and I will be friends before this is over!