

A Little Bit of Dyeing

Decided to add to my charity wool for socks, since it seems I have more time for some more socks - this is what I kettle-dyed yesterday - the heat made it easy to get the wool to dry quickly:

The turquoise came out very well, a nice solid color. The darker brown was not completely even - I'm calling it a heather, in spite of a ton of dye in the pot, so maybe I needed to let it stay in the pot for some longer. The lighter brown was a last-minute decision, since there was some dye left in the pot. I just threw in the unsoaked wool, then added a bit of brown later on.

When I add those colors to what I've dyed before, I realized that I copied the colors of my placemat - how funny!

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

