

A Nontouplet of Socks

I was getting tired of socks when I knit this sock. Totally lost my sock-knitting-mojo, even though I like how it turned out.

A lovely sock, mostly using the yarn I've hand-dyed myself. Then I wondered, how many socks have I knit in about the last month for Afghans for Afghans. Maybe 6 or 7? It was hard to remember, so I went looking. First, I found another about the same size:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

2 A completely different feel with it's bright colors, but also another older youth/adult size one. I kept on looking. Digging into the bag, I found three more, smaller, but very cute ones:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

5 Two of these use some patterning from Charlene Schurch's Sensational Socks. It's now coming back to me...

Then, at the bottom, I found four more - for the little people:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

9! NINE! A Nontouplet!!! (yes, I had to look the word up). Still the same bright colors, with more ribbing to accommodate little feet trying to get them on and off. I guess I know why I've lost my sock mojo. Time to send these in and find some other projects to knit!