

Snowpocalypse Watch

Our SF Bay Area has gone into overdrive with the predictions of snow. The San Francisco Chronicle dug out all the photos they could find in the archive about snow in the past. TV crews are already in the inner valleys showing us interesting and odd things like snow plows and piles of sand. My aquatics class today was trading info on how to protect citrus trees and other plants. We are on snowpocalypse watch!

Me, I'm working on the knitting - here's a cute preemie hat with spring blooming outside the window:

and I'm finishing up a baby sweater:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

It's the Buttons sweater and one of my favorite baby sweaters, especially in the very cute washable tweed yarn that was originally suggested for the pattern, Naturally Magic Garden Buttons.

A lovely package also came today, some amazing yarn came in the club shipment for Scout's Swag, appropriately named Citronella, so springlike! I'm in love! Maybe one of Rosemary Hill's shawl patterns in it?

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

and about that snow forecast:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

Yes, it's cold, the wind is whipping up pretty good, but snow? Not so much today.