

At Both Ends

On Brandy watch - another couple of sightings by neighbors, and dry food that I'm leaving out seems to be getting eaten - all very good. She is right here, and I'm going to try to get a trap for her.

On Mom watch - I wasn't happy with how my Mom looked this week - getting weaker, and in a lot of pain. So I bundled her up and took her to the ER (because the ortho practice wouldn't get her in), and feeling perhaps a bit wasteful of our medical $$$. As it turns out, it was a good thing - her doc took blood work (which I kinda wondered at), and found that she was low in sodium - an important electrolyte, especially if you have heart issues, which she does. It explains a lot, fortunately. She got admitted, and I'll be heading over soon - we're trying to figure out how this happened.

At least there was time for some knitting at the hospital. A gal on Ravelry a while back said that she had some Lorna's Laces sock yarn that she didn't like and would give way, so I immediately said, "Me, Me!" I'm using one of the patterns from Sensational Socks a mosaic pattern called Caesar's Check (rav link) - and I think they are looking very cute:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>
