

Soccupy Oakland

I've brazenly stolen for the title of this thread Clara Parkes' tweet shortly before she came over the bridge from the Knitting Lab event to do a short talk at A Verb for Keeping Warm and a book signing of The Knitter's Book of Socks: The Yarn Lover's Ultimate Guide to Creating Socks That Fit Well, Feel Great, and Last a Lifetime. Clara is part sleuth and scientist, part yarnie, and totally fun. I didn't expect her to be so lively and engaging (you know, the way a favorite author is able to write commandingly but doesn't always deliver in person), but she is as wonderful and cool as her books. She even held my sock for a photo op!

Ever curious, she asked about the heel, and I told her it was a Lucy Neatby garter stitch heel. Just in case you were wondering!

But here at Casa del No-Pox, we have also got some FOs. First up, a knitted cowl that will be a present for Christmas, once I knit a hat to match. It is Wurm, which is a hat pattern, but someone thoughtfully adapted the stitch pattern for a matching cowl too.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

I'm using the leftover yarn from the Poplar and Elm Sweater (rav project notes here), which is the lovely Sunday Knits Eden 3-ply yarn - an amazing merino. I used two colors (because that's what I had enough of), and I think it will be a staple for the recipient!

And my Mom's sweater is done just in time for the weather change here -- this is my adapted Victoria.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

It fits and looks great on her:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

I'll post in a bit about on-going projects!