

A Little Selfish-Knitting

So, apparently by using the word Olympic in a post title, you can quadruple the hits to your blog, especially with Canadians. Who knew?

Onto the selfish knitting, at which I've sucked the past few months. Sweater one of two is done, and she fits beautifully and is perfect for this season!

My mods: I made the body 2 inches longer (it was almost a crop when I tried on the sample), and the sleeves about 6 inches shorter, and the back I made a bit of an A-line for drape. Here's what the texture of the sweater looks like:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

A knitter looked at it and thought it was lace, - it has lovely sheen and the loose bits are fine!
At the moment, I'm using an old earring as the closure, we'll see if I graduate to an actual button!

Rav project details