

If it's August...

There's something about August. For most ordinary individuals, August means vacations and lightness and fun, and all kinds of lazy fun. For me, if it's August, I must be down for the count.

Two years ago, I came down with chicken pox on the eve of attending what became the very last and final Sock Summit (sob!). I did get some extremely lovely yarn from a blog reader who lives near the Wollmeise store in Germany - it was such a generous gift!

Last year, I ended up with a sinus infection that repeated itself three more times in the coming year -- and I attended a conference before I knew it, feeling like an old lady because I wanted to hit my room at 8 pm, just like a real 80 year old.

This year, I started the month well - certainly that the August curse would be broken. And for two lovely weeks I enjoyed myself like most people do in August - hikes, lunches, etc. And then this:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

---

I fell, and I fell stupidly, and had no one to blame but myself. I was on a stool at the church I've been hanging with, volunteering to help with the Music Camp(t), and I turned and moved forgetting I was on the stool, and took a tumble. I thought I had just badly sprained my ankle but a friend took me to urgent care, and it turns out that I had nicked the fibula, so it's a fracture, but apparently the kind of fracture that is treated more like a sprain.

Oh, the things I thought I would do -- well, they aren't getting done. At least not now, on the original timeframe.

On the plus side, there's plenty of time for knitting! Let's review:

First, a pair of socks - pretty vanilla, for a guy for Christmas:

I'm most of the way through the second one, although apparently while knitting in bed and watching my iPad, I cannot knit 3x1 ribbing reliably in a dark color. I had to reknit a good part of the 2nd leg.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

---

Second, I have a pair of challenging socks. These are Pret-Pret-Pretties \(Ravelry link\) by Heather Ordoover, found in the What (Else) Would Madame DeFarge Knit. I had problems, first because the e-edition of the book didn't have the correct cable stitch pattern for the cuffs, which I found out about through Ravelry (and was correct in the print edition).

It became painfully obvious after knitting the heel that something was seriously amiss in the pattern - as in, oops - that stitch pattern will not fit into that number of stitches! So I contacted Heather who has become a friend, and together we are figuring out what happened - as the editor of the book, Heather was better about getting other people's patterns fully tech-edited than she was about her own. She did design it well, and correctly, so she's basically recovering her initial genius!

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

---

It's a lovely sock, and I've learned three new things in knitting them, so it'll all work out.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

---

In more adventurous news, I am swatching for a sweater:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

---

The yarn is Cascade 220 quattro (each of the four strands are a different color, which gives the heathered color), and I'm going to knit a very basic cardigan sweater. Sounds boring, right? Here's the exciting part - I am a beta test knitter for a new software service by Amy Herzog -- Custom Fit - which will take your measurements, your desired sweater shape and treatments, and create custom knitting directions via her software. It's brilliant and so needed! But I am in one of the later testing groups, and while for a brief period it looked like I would be knitting while recuperating, but my contribution to the test knitting is now delayed to early September.

There's a bit more to report on the job front, and fiber-wise, but I'll post that stuff tomorrow!