

A Visit to Mendonoma

Mendonoma - you won't find it on a standard map of California, but yes, it apparently does exist:

This little slice of California has almost everything that makes California a wonderful place to live and visit - rolling hills, vineyards, coastal fog, gulls and redwoods. Just go north of San Francisco on 101, then take Route 128 at Cloverdale for a lovely drive through many micro-climates.

Here are a few photos of my visit to Mendocino:

One thing I will talk about is the upcoming yarn bombing \(oh, I hate the name for a wonderful thing\) in Mendocino. Streetcolor, well-known down here in Berkeley, is collaborating with the Mendocino Art Center and town businesses for a yarn-bombing this summer. I got a sneak peek at her dyed felted pieces, and some felted flowers (so beautifully dyed)

and when I went to the Mendocino Yarn Shop (a great store, go if you are in the area!), owner Aline was getting ready with her knitters for the installation outside their shop.

I was sorry that I missed seeing the installation, which is called "The Crayon Box", but there will be photos as things get installed. There are already some photos-up!
