

Satisfaction

There has been great enjoyment this week as several WIPs have been completed. First, the Lily (endless-knitting-in-linen-on-Size-0-needles) has been completed and is completely wearable, though more washings will be needed to get the full softness of the linen to shine:

I also finished up the Bottoms-Up bag that was knitted done a while back. Last Friday I took a few hours to get out the sewing machine to make a lining and put in a zipper. I'm not sure it's that fun to knit a project that takes up so much post-knitting time and effort, but I'm liking the end result.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

There was also immense satisfaction in finishing up a small kitty for the Copy Cat swap on Ravelry:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

I can't tell how fun it was to finish this cutie up - all out of proportion. I just love him! And those little traffic cones are a great pattern - so simple, and stuffed with high quality catnip, Izzie approved:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

