

Back on the Afghans for Afghans Train

The September announcement of a campaign for Afghans for Afghans was for blankets. I organized a big blanket effort as you might remember, in the spring, which was followed by another campaign here, so let's just say I've blanketed things pretty well this year.

The blanket making I was doing? Not so good. I made three more squares to finish a baby blanket, but they sat on my bed like this.

Izzie and Brandy began to think the squares were just for them. So I put them away so the poor baby who will get the eventual blanket won't be covered in cat hair.

This week, we learned there's a quick-quick campaign for youths 7-14 years old, for sweaters mittens, socks, vests (and hats, but they don't need that many hats). And it's with Church World Service (which is way better to donate to than the American Red Cross, don't get me started). And lookie what is flying off the needles:

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

It's the Incredible Custom-Fit Raglan sweater. I made in a cardigan version for the Ravelympics 2008. I'm using a closeout yarn I got from WEBS - Misty Merino at less than 20 microns. OMG! It is SO soft and squishy. And not a blanket.