

FO: Annis, and some other stuff to report

I finished my Annis shawl, which I think has come out quite nicely, although not the same size as the pattern - no silk in the yarn, I think:

I did a seed stitch border at the neckline, which I like for appearances and practicality's sake.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

I've also finished spinning up the Falkland fiber, see?

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.

<http://revknits.com>

This went quickly, so quickly that I was thinking back to the fall with the other Falkland fiber, then I realized that I spun this to a different weight. The green is a laceweight, and the blue-yellow is more of a sport weight. No wonder it went so much faster!

I'm planning to knit a Milkweed shawl out of this - I've been eyeing the pattern for months, and finally have a yarn that will be a good match.

Finally, I'm sending off some youth socks for the Afghans for Afghans summer campaign. Socks are a great campaign for this warm weather, and I'm working through a ton of worsted and fingering yarn that's hanging around. This is the first installment, and Izzie did her usual inspection.

Revknits

Faith and life seen through the stitches we make.
<http://revknits.com>

