

Tech Tip Tuesday: Weave in ends after blocking

There are various schools of thought on this topic - should ends be woven in before or after blocking?

I tend toward the latter. Blocking allows all of your stitches to get adjusted and smushed around (technical term), and that includes ends. You can even tighten or loosen end stitches to look better during blocking.

After the item has dried, the end is easier to deal with - the wonkiness of any fabric is now smoothed out, and you can put the correct tension into the weaving in of ends to make it look good now, without worrying what a block will do.

Do you have a preference here? I'd love to hear!
